Ricky's Trip to the Silly Zoo

Ricky was asleep in his bed, dreaming about a trip to the zoo. But the animals in this zoo weren't like any he had seen before.

The _____ had a long mane of _____ hair.
[animal] [color]

The _____ looked normal, but she was wearing a [animal]

big, pink, floppy _____ . The _____ was [object] [animal]

watching a movie and eating _____ , and the [food]

smelled like really dirty _____ .

RANGER RICK ADVENTURES

The Buzz on Bees

STORY BY KATHY KRANKING; ART BY THE CHARACTERSHOP

Ranger Rick and Scarlett Fox are headed to Sunny Meadow for a picnic. They want Boomer to come but are having trouble convincing him.

The friends follow Bitsy until they come to the top of a hill that overlooks Blossom Hollow.

Huh? Why is it called Blossom Hollow? I don't see any blossoms.

Where there used to be blossoms there are now buildings. That's why I had to move.

This is terrible, Bitsy.

Not all bees are lucky enough to find another place to live like I did. And we face other problems, too.

Like what?

Well, diseases are harming us. And so are pesticides that people spray. Even climate change hurts us, by changing when flowers bloom.

I have an idea for how we can help. We can find a sunny spot near Blossom Hollow and plant a garden full of plants that bees love!

That would be great. Thank you!

That's a good idea, Rick!

Well, goodbye, everyone. It was nice meeting you.

Bye, Bitsy!

Hey, you said you wanted a world without bees, remember?

Now that I know how important bees are, I've changed my mind.

I used to want to tell bees to "buzz off." Now I want to tell them, "Thank you!"

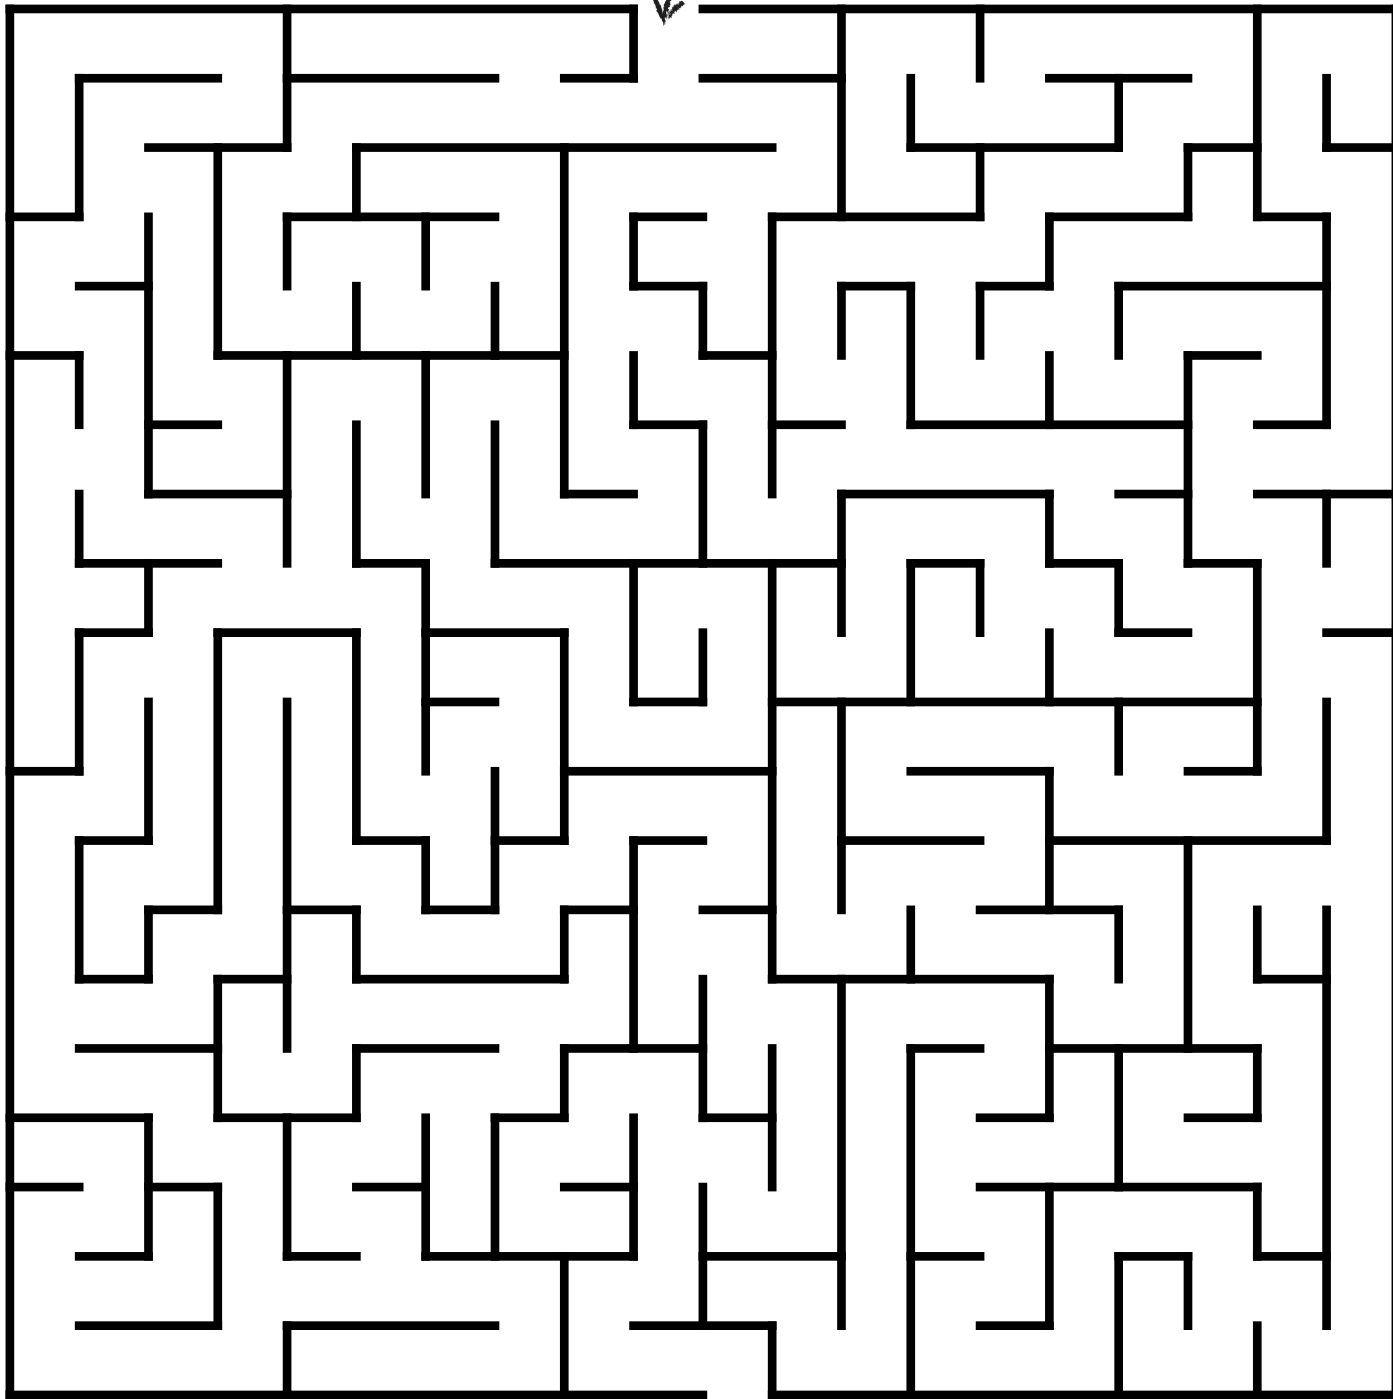

RANGER RICK'S FIELD NOTES

- Bees aren't the only animals that pollinate plants that are important to people. Bats, butterflies, moths, hummingbirds, and other animals are pollinators, too.
- Bees and other pollinators need habitat: places to find food, water, nesting places, and shelter. People take over habitat that pollinators need by clearing land for towns, roads, and farms.
- National Pollinators Week this year is June 20-26. You can celebrate by helping pollinators in your own yard. Visit RangerRick.org/pollinators to find out how. To order the best plants for pollinators in your area, have your parents visit GardenforWildlife.com/rr.
